Pathak Shamabesh and Penguin book fair

Ratan K Das | Dhaka | April 07, 2018

Both Pathak Shamabesh and Penguin Random House India are committed to publishing great books, connecting readers and authors globally. They want to spread the love of reading. For this reason, these two publishing houses jointly organised a month-long book fair in Pathak Shamabesh Centre in the capital of Bangladesh, Dhaka.

The book fair inaugurated on 1st of April. Director General of Bangla Academy Shamsuzzaman Syed Manzoorul Islam said, there is a significant market for English books in Bangladesh. For this reason, Penguin came here. Not only this, many of our writers write in English.

In the past we sold their books, now the time has changed, they will sell our books in abroad though we do not have sufficient translator.

Kamal Chowdhury said, it is very positive that from now one of our publishers will work with a world-class publication house. I think positive change reflects through this fair. It's a good sign. He urged Bangla Academy to form an elite translation cell under its jurisdiction. Guest emphasised on a quality translation of Bangla classics for the global audience. Shamsuzzaman Khan said due to lack of promotion international-standard literary works in Bangla had so far failed to reach global readers. Tariq Sujat sought cooperation from all stakeholders of the publication sector to promote international linkage of local publishers.

Alkesh Biswal hoped for a well-attended fair. He said Penguin's presence in Bangladesh not for only commercial purpose. There are many talented writers in Bangladesh. If they start writing in English, they can reach their literature to the world. The publishing house would bring the translation of Bengali literary works in a couple of years if the initiative seemed viable, he added.

The book fair will continue until April 30. There are displaying so many books under a single roof, more than 10,000 copies of 3,000 titles are displaying. 20 to 30 percent discount is offering on Penguin Random House books.

An Exclusive Interview

Boi Bodol Concept: An exclusive interview with Mr Saifullah Mahfuz Orko, Founder of BoiBodol

Every student of the university purchases books for the incumbent semester. After completing the semester bought books are remain unused, and student has to repurchase new books as per the requirement of the new semester courses. This process continues up to the ending the degrees. Under Boi Bodol concept, a particular student can give unused books to another student, and in return he/she can receive from someone else. Under this cycle, every student can save money and time.

Based on the above concept, Mr Saifullah Mahfuz Orko, Master's student of Dept. of Public Administration, University of Dhaka took that initiative. This concept has become popular, and it spreads throughout the country. Mr Orko also visited the United Kingdom under patronising of British Council where 29 young leaders from 15 different nations met together and learned a lot of ideas. He was born in Jashore but grown up in Savar, Dhaka. His family members are the key source of inspiration to him.

Recently he has talked with TLT, regarding Boi Bodol and others issues. This interview is conducted by Mr Md Aahsan Habib, one of TLT's Senior Editorial Board members.

Mr Md Aahsan Habib

TLT: How did you start your Boi Bodol Journey?

Saifullah Mahfuz Orko: I was a participant of Active Citizens Youth Leadership Training provided by the British Council and Democracy Watch jointly. I took the training from 22nd to 25th February 2017. As a part of the training, we needed to undertake a Social Action Project to help our community. As most of the students of my batch were from the University of Dhaka, we thought that we could help the students first.

TLT: To whom you shared your idea first?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: As I stated before, we were around 30 young souls gathered at that training and the final day all of us presented our idea about how we could contribute to our society. I also introduced my, and that was installing 'BoiBodol'. Eventually, the idea got the highest vote and was taken as a social action project.

TLT: How many people are involved in your Boi-Bodol Platform, including followers?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: A lot. We have 9 active volunteers, but through Facebook, we have around 2,800 followers. We are, and more campuses are contacting us to have a branch of BoiBodol at their universities also. We are working on it.

TLT: At present how many universities are using your idea?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: At present only University of Dhaka, our home campus is using the idea. We are in constant contact with Islamic University, Kushtia, Kushtia Government College and Noakhali Science and Technology University as they've shown interest to implement the idea at their campuses too.

TLT: Tell us about a success story.

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: It was challenging to figure out how we can reach people and how we can collect the books. For almost one and the half month, my team and I tried many ideas, but nothing was working. The University of Dhaka is a large institution, and we couldn't go for poster as we had budget constraints. We also could not install booths as all of us were running students and hadn't enough time to do that. Finally, in one useful meeting, the idea came to our minds. We planned to create a facebook page, through which we could take the requirement for books, and also if anybody wanted to give us away from their books, could contact with us on the same page. We planned to create a Google data sheet where we can put the names of the books so that it would become easier for students to find out their required book more easily. It worked like magic. This was the great success for us, the BoiBodol team, to create a library in the air!

Interview continuing....

An Exclusive Interview

Boi Bodol Concept: interview continuing ...

TLT: What are the hurdles do you face for this work?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: There are many challenges. As students, we couldn't spend money from our pocket to run a project like BoiBodol. And yet we had to manage the books that people were giving away. There were a lot of books, but we had no place to keep them. So we started keeping them under our cots in our residential halls.

TLT: How do you make the idea potential and sustainable?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: we need to change a lot of things. We are working to have a more sustainable and potential plan.

TLT: Many of the cases users purchased pirated books from Nilkhet which is a clear violation of Copyright Act. However, the bookseller will be affected. What do you think regarding this issue?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: We, from our platform, never support such activities. But it has to be kept in mind that the prices of books, especially at the University level is out of the reach of students in many cases. The policymakers and publishers should look upon this too.

TLT: Under your project, you were invited to visit England where you met the different leaders and learned a lot of things. How do you apply it to our country?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: Being an International study visit at the United Kingdom was a once in a lifetime experience as there were 29 young leaders from 15 different countries. I learnt a lot from them, about their society, their culture, the problems they are facing at their part of the world and the ways they are following to get themselves out of the problems. I have already shared those experiences with my fellow team members and are looking forward to implementing a handful of ideas that I have gathered from the visit.

TLT: Student/People those are not connected with social media and not habituated in apps application. How can they get benefit from your Boi Bodol platform?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: At Muhsin Hall, students can get their book with the help of the Muhsin Hall Debating Club. Though we are an only one-year-old project, still we have a lot of shortcomings. This is one of the fundamental shortcomings that we are hardly trying to overcome.

TLT: If the government applies your idea in Primary and Secondary School level, a lot of revenue can be saved for publication of those books? What do you think regarding this issue?

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: That will be very much appreciated. We believe that knowledge should be free and open for all. If this happens, we will be delighted. It will be an act of pride and honour for us, the BoiBodol team.

TLT: Thank you

OrkoSaifullah Mahfuz Orko: Thank you.

Every shopping mall should have a bookshop:

An editorial view

Ratan K Das

There is a lack of library and bookshop in this capital (Dhaka). The condition of libraries in school, college and universities are not good enough. We have many schools and colleges in the country where there is no library at all.

Jebun Nahar, a school teacher from Dhaka, expressed her frustration in this way while tried to buy Jahanara Imam's 'Ekattorer Dinguli'. She came to Aziz Super Market at Shahbagh from Uttara. She said, 'Tomorrow is my son's birthday. I would like to give him this book as birthday gift. Though, there are few bookshops in Uttara where I failed to buy my desired books several times. For this reason, I came here after passing two and half hours in the hectic traffic jam. This jam ruined my day totally. Because of this problem, I did not come to buy books.'

Rafsan Jamil Shreyas came to Nilkhet from Mirpur 10 for buying books. He said, 'There are many CD shops in every shopping mall in this city, but there is no available quality bookshops. The government should pay attention to solve this problem. In addition to this, the owner of the shopping mall, cultural minded businessman and publishers are supposed to take the initiative.'

This is the typical scenario of Dhaka. Most of the reader and students have to go to Aziz Super Market, Nilkhet or New Market to buy books. Some shopping malls have bookstores, but their collection is pitiable. It looks like a grocery shop owner opens a bookshop.

Many people think that, Government should initiate to open at least one bookshop in each shopping mall in the city.

Administration should find out the reason behind why there is no bookshop in each shopping mall at all? Is selling book not a profitable business? If so, the government should motivate the businessmen to overcome this problem.

Those who know the business of bookselling they should come forward to starting their business. Good publishers and creative businessmen must be encouraged.

Library Professionals of Bangladesh, a Facebook group approaching to its 8th birthday

Momena Khatun, Gothenburg

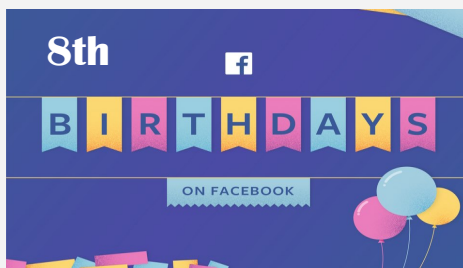

How many Facebook groups are you a member of right now? Most of you may not know the exact number and could not list off every single one. I know I cannot too, but the first group that will come to my mind is the Library Professionals of Bangladesh (in short LPB) that was created on 8 May 2010. 'Connecting People and Knowledge' is the motto of LPB. The platform aims to connect all the Bangladeshi library professionals who are using Facebook.

In Bangladesh, the Facebook was getting popular in the late 2010s. The 'Harvard-only social network' (Earlier version of Facebook) was originally launched in 2004. In 2007, Facebook amended their restrictive practices and opened for public. A couple of group e-mails exist among the library professionals during the period. The library professionals mostly received emails during office hours, and many regret to even open professional e-mails due to priority to official work. Whereas, most of the professionals use Facebook in leisure. The LPB admins predicted the future of group module of Facebook and started to give the flavor to the library professional to share, care and connect with professionals when they are in leisure.

There was a time when professionals came to know about the opportunities and occasions, for example, further higher education, scholarship, training, ongoing library movement, state-of-art technologies using by the libraries in the home and abroad and many others professional activities news and views, after a long time the event had happened. There was a definite gap between professional information need and significant trusted source of information disseminated. The LPB started to fill the gap slowly but steadily.

LPB's one of the major advantages is that members can comment and discuss on any issue, without being a Facebook friend. They can receive feedback on any subject matter or queries that they might have. It is an excellent source of immediate feedback. A post can be pinned to the top to put a call to action and guarantee that professionals draw eyeballs to it.

LPB helps to find the right people with similar interests, keeping everyone in the loop to get informative information, interacting directly with anyone who may have questions and encouraging others to help. LPB is a particularly popular and useful as it allows discussion forums and threads based on common interests and activities. It is an excellent mechanism for assembly of people of similar interests or profession. It enables to present a range of interpersonal information with a variety of Web 2.0 technologies.

Currently, LPB comprises of around 1500 professionals.

LPB's membership is available only for the Bangladeshi origin library professionals. It is a 'closed group' to protect the misuse of the professionals' photos and information. It gives strength to individual members to raise their voice within the professional community first. One must have a professional affiliation (for example, work in a library, or have obtained a degree in the discipline or current student) and have to make sure the availability of professional affiliations on his/her Facebook public profile before sending a join request to LPB. The admins explore the public profile of the person to be sure to add to the group.

In addition to the Admins, Biswanath Bhattacharjee, Saif Rahman, Abdullah Al-Modabber, Ajm Saifullah, Muhammad Abdul Karim, Mohi Uddin Tariq, Rafiqur Rahman, Prodip Kumer Roy, Mohammad Abdur Rahim Mahmud, Muhammad Saadat

Ali, Mohammad Mofakharul Islam Chowdhury, Sawad Parvez, Mohammad Amiruzzaman Jewel, Md Mamun-Or Rashid, Ziaul Hoque Shakil, Nonigopal Roy, Rupan Chakma, Razia Sultana, Shompa Kazi, Nadia Mohamed became member of the group during the very first two-days.

Dr Jakaria Rahman, Ahasan Habib, Dr Dilara Begum, Momena Khatun and M Hossam Haider Chowdhury have been performing as the admins of the LBP facebook group since the commencement. The admins take care of the professional value of this group. The combined efforts keep them energised about the road ahead. The current cover photo is designed by A. K. M. Nurul Islam (Apu). The image focused our nationalism and the transformation of library profession in the country. The logo of LPB is illustrated with the books and a human head. The head shows the rows of books which carries the symbol of knowledge. The background is a piece of old paper.

March 28, 2018

By Mi Ki Kyaw Myin

In June, the U.S. State Department Trafficking in Persons Report moved Myanmar up to Tier 2 on its watch list, acknowledging "significant efforts" to combat human trafficking and forced labor in the country.
